Herr Fritz N. Huttman the delightful tenor of the Antoinette LeBrun Grand Opera Company, is not wholly unknown in Los Angeles, as he was the tenor soloist at the Innes May Festival, given as the last attraction in the Old Hazard's Pavilion. And thereby hangs a bit of a story.

Huttman besides being a good singer is also an excellent business man. His engagement here was preceded by a similar one in San Francisco, and his time with the Innes band carried him through with it to Portland. The band after leaving here had two weeks of one-night stands to kill that much time, and all the little towns up the Southern Pacific to Portland were booked and the business manager was sent ahead to advertise them. Meantime the general manager had resigned at this point, and this left the band without a business head. Seeing the conditions Herr Huttman offered his services and Innes accepted them.

This worked very well in most cases, as the chief duties of the singer off the stage were to settle up with the local people in each town. But when one small place was reached it was found that no one was there to sell the tickets, so Huttman had to take the box office, rake in the cash, and then when it came his turn slip around and sing. By changing his coat he thought no one would notice this.

But he missed his guess. In the very first row sat two young women who had haggled long over their tickets, seeking better ones. When Herr Huttman stepped out to sing they got even.

"Why," said one girl in a voice perfectly audible to both singer and audience, "that's the sassy fellow that took our money."

"Yes," was the reply. "No wonder he was sassy. It takes all the band gets in to pay his salary, and he sells the tickets so none of it'll get away—the stingy thing."

"And," adds Huttman, "I had to stand there and sing to them—Every morn I bring thee violets."—Los Angeles Herald.

Miss Margaret Osmond, of this city, delivered an interesting address before the Seventh District Federation meeting of the Women's clubs, which was held in Pratt last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Jones returned to Denver Sunday evening.

O. W. Brandt, of Olmitz, returned last Monday from a visit of several weeks with his brother L. W. Brandt, up at Grosswerder, Saskatchewan, Canada. Mr. Brandt thinks that is a very fine country up there. Almost all of the farm crops grown here are raised there in abundance, and in addition he says that fruit does much better there than here. A number of citizens from the vicinity of Olmitz have gone up into that country and purchased farms, and he says all of them are happy and prospering.

"Jack Rabbit Justice," and "Tricks o' the Trade," is the title of a very interesting little booklet gotten out by Judge William H. Thompson, of the Garden City district, who has just been elected for a second term. It contains some good reading on the delays incident to the trial of cases in the courts, and shows that delays as are usually manifested, can, by a business judge, be disposed of and the cases handled in a reasonable time to the interests of all litigants.

C. G. Holmstein, a former Central Normal College boy, is now holding the position of chief clerk for the Santa Fe at Amarillo, Texas.

About the best corn yield so far reported in this vicinity this year is that of Dave Robertson of the south side, whose corn is making an average of 42 bushels per acre, which not a record breaking yield by any means, is mighty good for this year in which the crop is the shortest in this locality for years and shows that Dave is no slouch of a farmer.
